FIRST UNITED STATES MINT
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

The Act of April 2, 1792 provided for the establishment of the first United States Mint. These buildings were the birthplace of our National Coinage. The first U.S. Mint also had the distinction of being the first public building erected by an Act of Congress, under the personal supervision of President Washington.

This modern reproduction of the famous picture "Ye Olde Mint", originally painted by Edwin Lamasure in 1914, was recreated by the brush of Artist Natalie Hause, from which this print was made.

"INSPECTING THE FIRST UNITED STATES COINAGE"

by John W. Dunsmore

Martha Washington sits before a tray of silver half dimes held by first Chief Coiner, Henry Voight. Looking on around her are President Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Treasury Secretary Alexander Hamilton and Mrs. Hamilton. Newly appointed Director of the Mint, David Rittenhouse, offers a coin from the tray for the First Lady's inspection. It is known that President Washington had a great interest in the Mint and provided some of his family silver for the production of our Nation's first silver coinage.

UNITED STATES MINT, PHILADELPHIA 1833 – 1901

At the time this scene was drawn of the second Philadelphia Mint, the California Gold Rush was in full swing. With the enormous influx of gold, the U.S. Mint had become an object of more than common attention and interest, and the place was usually crowded with visitors watching the various processes which the metal went through before it became a finished coin.

Philadelphia Mint, 1833-1901

The second Philadelphia Mint was located on the corner of Chestnut and Juniper streets. Construction of this Mint began in 1829 and was completed in May, 1833. In 1836, the first coining press powered by steam was introduced. For over 70 years this handsome neoclassic structure was a landmark in Philadelphia. In October, 1901, the doors closed for the move into the new building.

The U. S. MINT is a government establishment for the coining of lawful metallic money. Besides making the coined money for the United States, the mint also makes metallic money for foreign nations and does considerable business in the line of supplying fine gold and silver bars for industrial uses. In 1930 new and improved molds for minor coinage ingots were adopted in the melting and refining department and a grinding device has been installed which eliminated all hand filing.

Philadelphia Mint, 1901-1969

The third Philadelphia Mint was located at Seventeenth and Spring Garden streets. It covered a ground area of 58,000 square feet and cost $1.5 million to build after an initial cost of $329,338 for the site and incidental expenses. Beautiful Tiffany Mosaic Panels depicting the ancient methods and processes of coinage greeted visitors entering this Mint.

THE UNITED STATES MINT

A Bureau of the Department of the Treasury

The Act of April 2, 1792, which provided for gold, silver and copper coinage, also created the first U.S. Mint in the City of Philadelphia, then the Nation's capital. President Washington placed the operation under the supervision of the Secretary of State, where it remained until 1799, when the Mint became an independent agency reporting directly to the President. Subsequent legislation set up branch mints and assay offices and authorized public depository functions in these establishments. The coinage Act of 1873 put all mint and assay office activities under the newly-organized Bureau of the Mint in the Department of the Treasury.

Mint Service activities are administered by the Director of the Mint from Bureau headquarters in Washington, D.C. The Director is appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and is responsible for coinage production and the distribution of coins to and among the Federal Reserve banks and branches, which in turn release them, as required, to commercial banks. In addition, the Mint maintains physical custody of Treasury stocks of gold and silver; moves, places into storage and releases gold and silver bullion from custody for such purposes as authorized. It also manufactures coinage dies. On a reimbursable basis, the Mint manufactures and sells medals of a national character, manufactures coinage for foreign governments, and produces proof and uncirculated coins and sets for sale.

The Director oversees the operation of the Philadelphia and Denver Mints, the Assay Office at San Francisco, and two depositories for the storage of precious metals, one at Fort Knox, Ky., and the other at West Point, N.Y. Under Congressional authority, the West Point facility is also being used as an auxiliary coinage plant. The Bureau also maintains the restored San Francisco Old Mint, which houses a customer services center for processing numismatic orders, administrative offices, and a two-level museum containing Mint and early California displays and memorabilia.

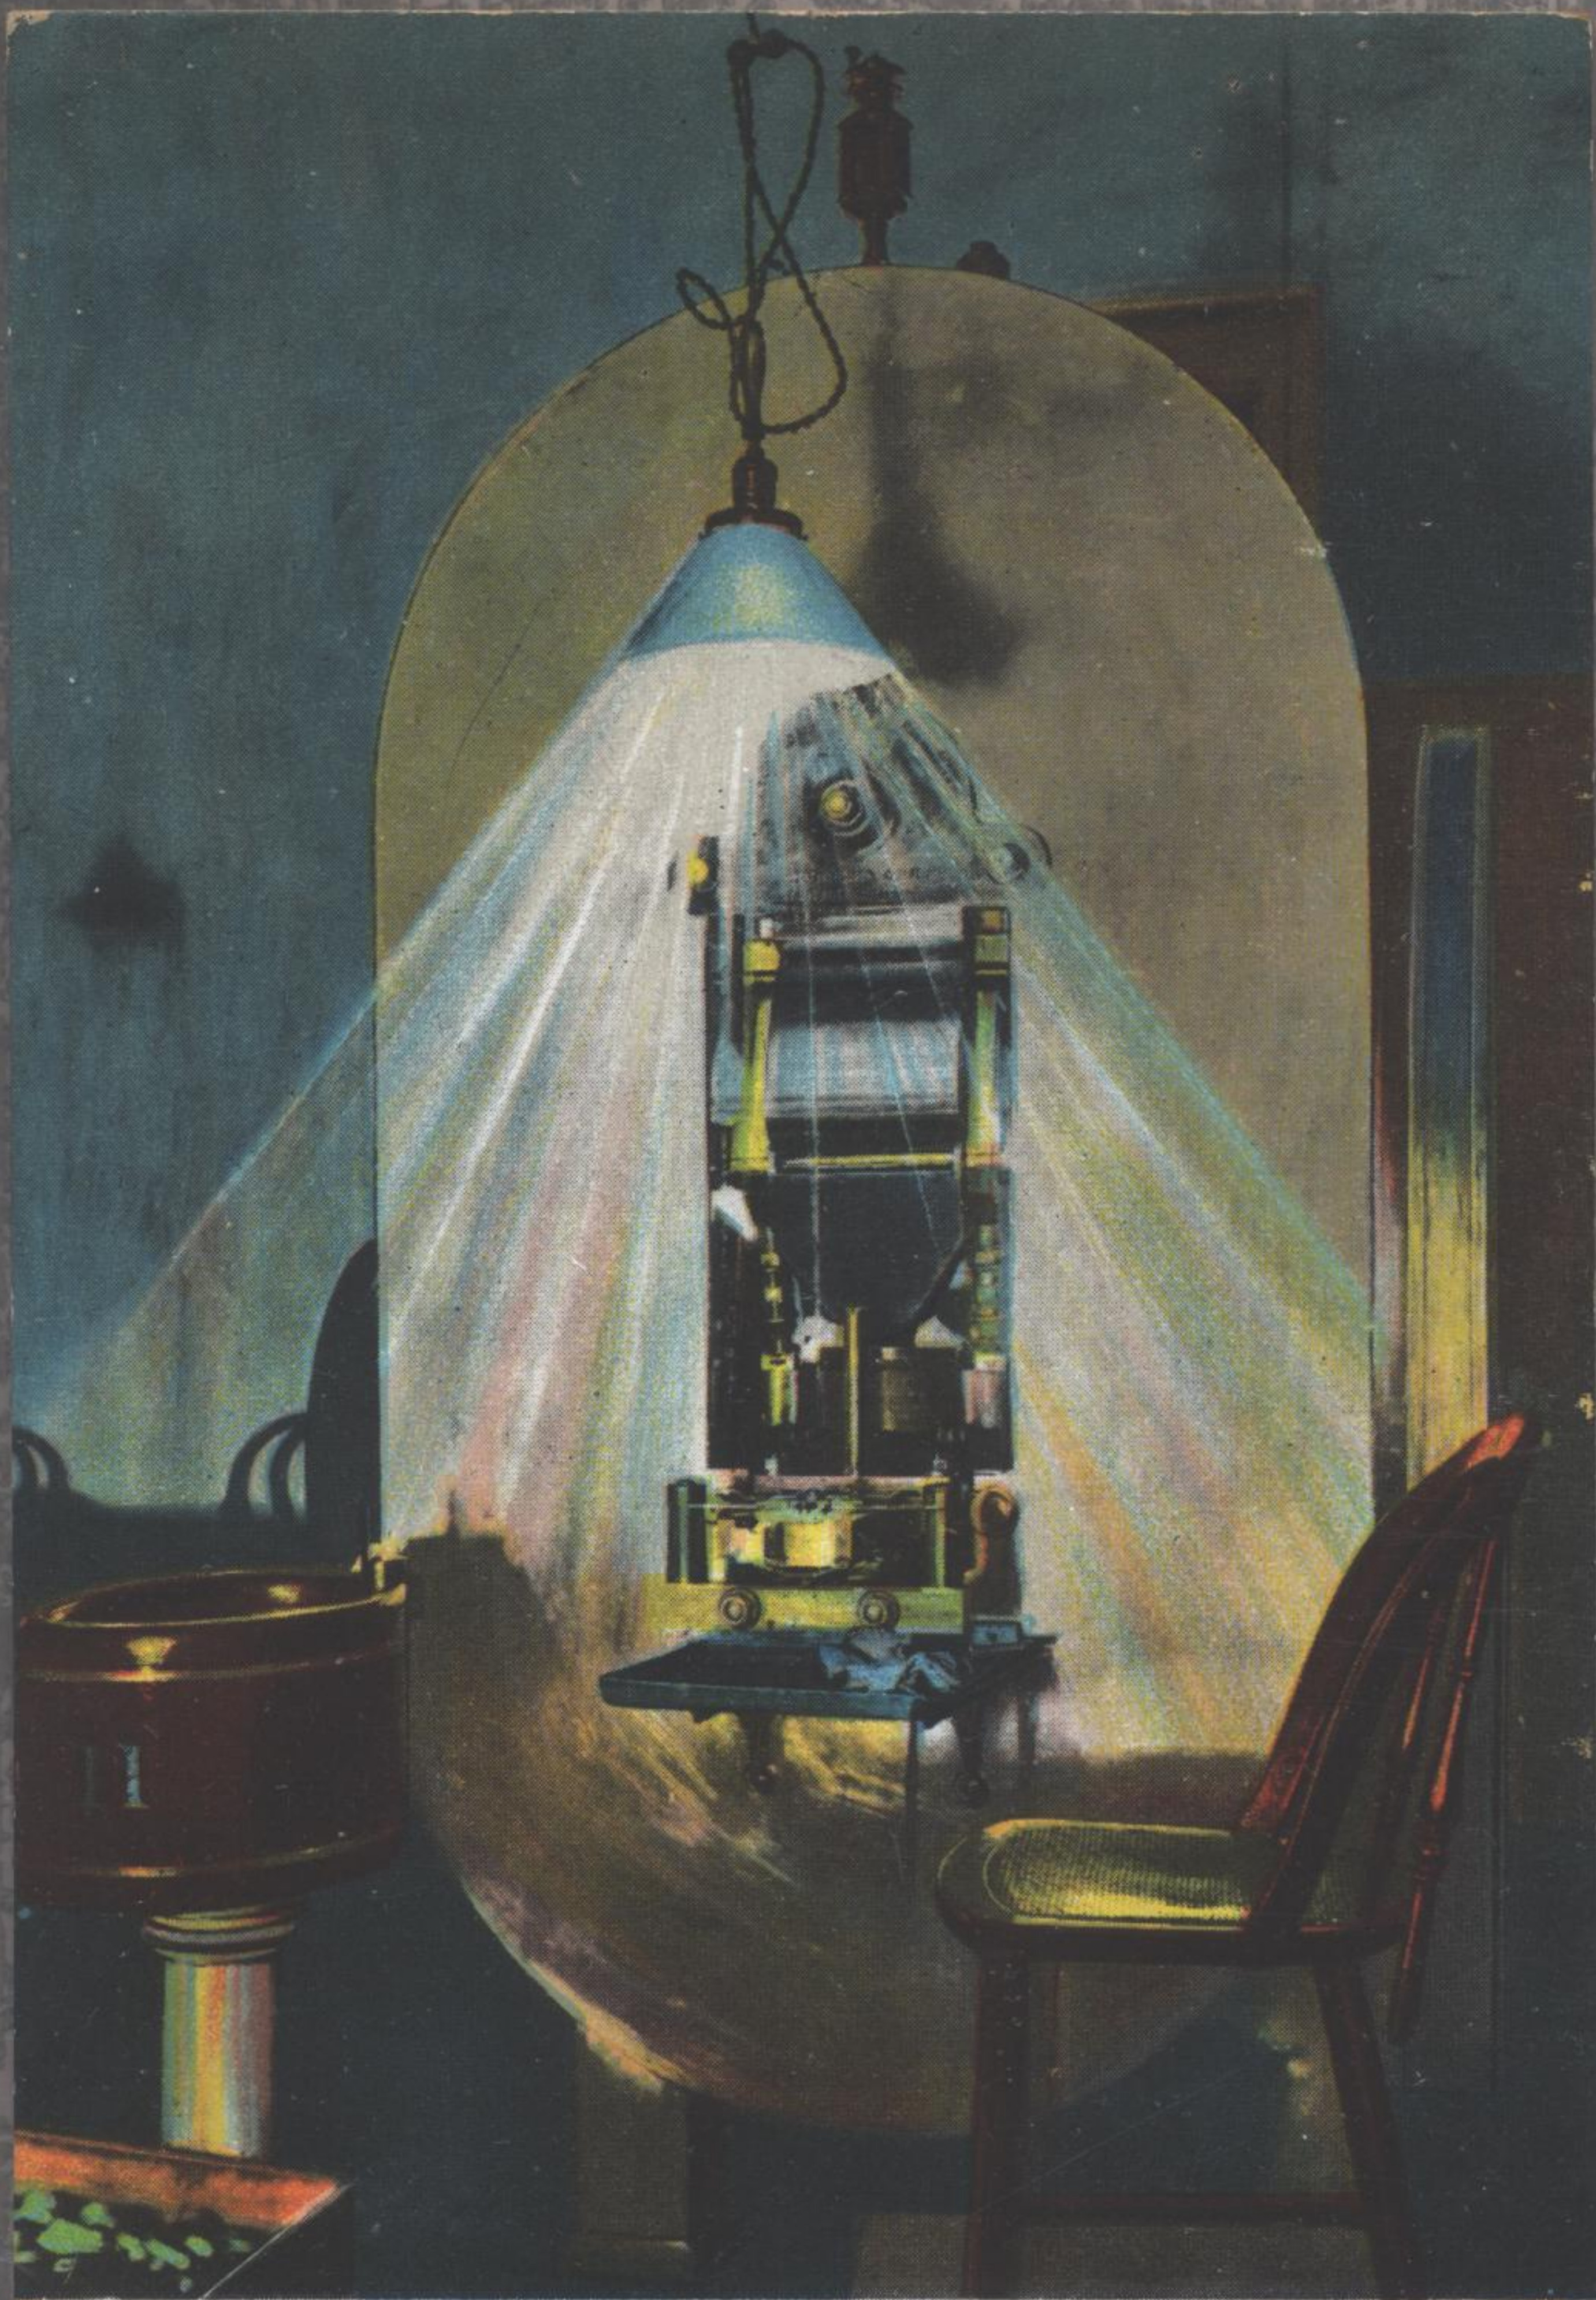

The Director of the Mint reports annually to the Secretary of the Treasury on Mint operations for the fiscal year. The report includes statistical tables covering coin production, inventories and distribution, as well as the production of national medals and foreign coinage produced by U.S. Mints.

During this time, circa 1903, the Mint separated gold from silver by treating the bullion with nitric acid, which dissolved the silver and left the gold. This solution was then treated with salt water and zinc, thus separating the silver. Today the Mint purchases the majority of their coinage metals in prefabricated strips.

Stamping Gold Coins U.S. Mint, Philadelphia

Coinage production at the time this photograph was taken, circa 1903, required a large amount of human assistance. Coin blanks were fed by hand into a tube at the front of the press; from there they were transferred between the dies for striking. Gold coins were produced using 35 to 155 tons of pressure and at a rate of approximately 90 pieces per minute.

PHILADELPHIA at NIGHT

The letters of the title are large and filled with various black and white photographs of Philadelphia landmarks, including Independence Hall, the Liberty Bell, and various city buildings.

1421 Arch St. - I never had a better time than I am
Nov. 25th having here. Busy all day & see a fine show every night. No time to worry while or think. How is me here.

Dear Friend. This day reminds me of a pleasant visit near one year ago,
it does not seem possible, but so true.
I had hoped to see you often if able to walk this distance. I say you will go away for your Christmas. I am glad you are better & can enjoy going.
I shall try to see you before long.
I am feeling better & busy all the time. Do be careful this cold weather. Do is riding out, but I cannot go Mangard - is growing away from me. H. M. H. M.
